Please Note: Nearly every financial institution in the world has a US dollar correspondent bank they remit US dollar wires through to get the funds into the United States Federal Reserve clearing system. This is done so they do not need to maintain an authenticated relationship with every potential intermediary bank. This means that most wires do not need to travel through our listed US intermediary bank, but we include Wells Fargo's SWIFT code for instances where a foreign remitter is required to have one, typically on their bank's online wire portal.
